COS Alums Follow Different Paths — Overcome Obstacles to Pursue Goals

When COS classmates Lisette Horne & Autam Mendez graduated from high school in 2018, they each had a clear but ambitious goal. Lisette knew she wanted to go to graduate school, while Autam wanted to play Division 1 basketball. They shared their stories with us.

Lisette Horne ’14
Lisette was the first in her family to attend college when she accepted a full scholarship for undergraduate studies at the University of Minnesota. In 2022, the University awarded her a fellowship to pursue a PhD in social psychology.

Q: Tell me about the field of social psychology and what you hope to do?
Lisette: Social psychologists are interested in learning about human behavior and how thoughts, choices, and actions are influenced by the larger society.

Autam Mendez ’14
In 2023, Autam received an athletic scholarship to play D1 basketball for the University of St. Thomas as a graduate student. We spoke during a two-game road trip on a day that began with a 4 am flight to Tulsa, OK. The Tommies won both games.

Autam has been racking up accomplishments since middle school when she first led St. Matthew’s, then COS’s basketball teams to city championships. At Cretin-Derham Hall High School (CDH) she earned a spot on — Continued on page 5
Dear Alums & Friends & Families of COS,

There is a well-known hymn that reminds us, “We walk by faith and not by sight…”

Each year you make an act of faith; an act of faith in our school, an act of faith in our students, and an act of faith in what your generosity and commitment will achieve.

Among the items in this issue of The Good News you will read the story of two remarkable alums of COS — Autam and Lisette. The stories about Autam and Lisette give us a glimpse into the lives of two COS graduates and their accomplishments; but more than accomplishments, we get an inside look at their character, their commitment, and the sacrifices they have learned to make.

At one point Lisette says, “My faith set me up with strong morals and personal integrity. It influences the way I present myself, the way I treat others, and the way I expect to be treated.”

In pursuit of her dream to play Division 1 sports, Autam says, “I didn’t want to sell myself short. I wanted to prove that I had the work ethic and talent to play at the highest level.”

Biographers tell us that the seeds of the greatness of the adult are often found in the life experience of the child. These two young women are witness to what the seed produces as it matures.

These stories are made possible because of you. Lisette and Autam witness the act of faith you make; an act of faith in your school, an act of faith in your students, and an act of faith in what your generosity and commitment will and do achieve.

What you do makes a difference, a profound difference in the student’s life and the lives of those whom the student touches. The story of COS is truly part of your story.

With gratitude,

Father Steve Adrian, Canonical Administrator of COS

Alums & Friends & Families Celebrate Mass with Students

Suzanne and Ted Snyder joined St. Matthew’s in the mid-1980’s after buying a house on the West Side. They were newly married and wanted to make the neighborhood their home. “Ted knew Fr. Adrian and he loved the West Side,” explained Suzanne, who grew up in Detroit, “As soon as I came here, I understood why.” Ted passed away 13 years ago but Suzanne still lives in the house they shared and attends Mass at St. Matthew’s.

Having retired from her work in affordable housing, Suzanne has begun using her 401(k) required minimum distribution (RMD) to make charitable contributions. This year she added A&F&F’s Tuition Assistance Fund at Community of Saints (COS) to her list of RMD contributions.

“This is a mission I want to support,” said Suzanne, who’s contributed to tuition assistance for years. Using her RMD simplified the process and gave her some tax benefits. “It’s not like I’m a wealthy person but I’m doing well enough, so I could give a little bit more this way.”

Suzanne is impressed with the level of support COS receives from the community. “My husband and I both had the privilege of Catholic education,” she said. “I love what COS does to support kids who might not be able to get a Catholic education.”

For information on how you can set up an RMD charitable contribution, contact Doug Lieser, COS Director of Advancement, at 651-457-2510.
It’s a field of study that has lots of applications. I’m keeping my options open, but I’m thinking about going into industry, whether at a nonprofit or in the private sector.

Q: What attracted you to this field?

Lisette: In high school I thought about majoring in psychology and by the end of my freshman year, I knew I wanted to get my PhD. As an undergrad, I participated in programs that helped first-generation and other underrepresented students develop the skills and experience to successfully apply to and thrive in graduate school.

Q: As the first in your family to attend college, how was the transition from high school to college?

Lisette: Overall, it went pretty smoothly. I took a lot of advanced classes in high school which helped prepare me academically. And because of the scholarship, I was privileged not to have to work my freshman year. The biggest surprise was how hard it was to meet other first-generation college students like me. I thought there would be more of us. I had some really great freshman year friends who weren’t first-gen, and they answered questions I had about how college really works. Eventually I found other first-gen students I could relate to, but it took time.

Q: What’s different for a student who’s the first in her family to attend college, compared to someone who’s not?

Lisette: I think the overall navigation of everything is harder. As a first-gen student, you don’t have a parent or other family member to give you even a small sense of what to expect. What you might call the hidden expectations and rules of college. You’re figuring it all out on your own. If your family is lower income, you’re also on your own financially. For me that meant learning how to complete the FAFSA (Federal Student Aid Application) and managing all my personal finances on my own. I was full scholarship, so I didn’t have to deal with student loans and work study, but others do. First-generation students have to navigate the whole complicated college financial system which makes everything a little more difficult.

Q: What does your family think about you going to graduate school?

Lisette: There’s a lot of excitement and pride, along with a little confusion. They have some questions as to exactly what I’m doing, but overall, they’re very proud that when I’m done, I’ll be Dr. Lisette Horne. For my younger siblings, it makes college feel more accessible. My brother Alejandro is 14 and we’ve already talked about how he wants to go to the U because I went there.

Q: What advice do you have for first-gen students at COS who hope to pursue a college education?

Lisette: It won’t be easy, but it’s possible. There are a lot more people and resources available to help than you would expect, but you have to seek them out. Upward Bound and Catch a Break are both programs that help first-gen students and students with significant financial challenges. When you’re doing everything on your own, you need all the help you can get.

the Varsity basketball team as a freshman and became one of a handful of CDH players to score over 1,000 points in high school. She also lettered in volleyball and softball and received an Athena Award for outstanding academic and athletic achievements.

“I Didn’t Want to Sell Myself Short”

Only 1.2% of all female high school players go on to play D1 basketball, and despite the accolades, Autam didn’t get the college offers she’d hoped for. Instead, Autam accepted a scholarship at Northern Iowa Area Community College (NIACC) which has a reputation for sending players on to D1 programs. “I didn’t want to sell myself short,” Autam explained. “I wanted to prove that I have the work ethic and the talent to play at the highest level.”

There were some bumps in the road. After years of ankle injuries, Autam’s first season at NIACC ended with her having to get reconstructive surgeries on both ankles. But as soon as she could, she threw herself into rehab and training to be ready for the start of basketball. After missing the first few games, she led her team to a regular season title, placing the school at the top of the national rankings and was named Iowa Community College’s Female Athlete of the Year.

“I Got a Taste of the D1 Experience”

Autam achieved her D1 dream with a scholarship to play at San Jose State University (SJSU), but after just four games, the season was cancelled because of COVID. “I got a taste of the D1 experience — some of the traveling and the workouts,” said Autam. But being so far from family was hard. “During COVID, I only went home twice for the whole year.”

After her second year at SJSU, Autam graduated with a degree in Communications. She had one more year of eligibility because of the pandemic, but she wasn’t interested in any of the schools that were calling, until she heard from the University of St. Thomas where she played this year. She ticks off a list of what she loves about the program. “I get to play at home, we have a great coach, and everyone on the team looks out for one another.”

Gratitude for Support

Reflecting on her journey, Autam says that staying mentally strong has been the biggest challenge, especially after the surgeries when it would have been easy to second guess herself. The payoff has been the intense competition and the many people — teammates, faculty, and especially the coaches, who have supported her along the way. “All my coaches helped me develop determination and grit when I was coming up,” Autam said. “They helped make me who I am.”

When she was younger, Autam competed in four sports, but eventually dropped one when she realized she couldn’t meet her own standard of trying to be the best she could be in all of them. “I did what I had to do,” she said.

That commitment to excellence is reflected in Autam’s advice to COS students who choose to pursue an ambitious goal. “Be willing to work hard, trust the process, and always be yourself,” she said. “And it’s okay if your journey ends up being different from anyone else’s.”

Memories
FROM ST. MICHAEL’S CLASS OF 1973

This reunion will be the first one ever for St. Michael class of ’73 and excitement is growing. Former classmates have been digging up old photos and swapping stories. Here are a few memories from members of the organizing committee, which include: Mike Bann, Deb Burgy Hendrickson, Sheila Deziel Steiner, Chuck (Bluhm) Dosh, Michele McEllistrem Brin, Tim Quigley, Kathy Seery, and John Wadell.

WHEN FR. JOHN O’NEILL DIED
Fr. John was affiliated with the parish for about 50 years, so it was a big deal when he died.

Before his wake, Sr. Denis, our religion teacher, said to us, “We’re going to process past the casket where Father John is, and I think it would be so nice if you were to touch his hand reverently.” Nobody touched his hand. Then we were concerned afterwards that Sr. Denis would yell at us because nobody touched his hand. Years later I saw Sr. Denis at Carondelet, and asked if she remembered telling us to touch Father John’s hand when he was in the casket. She said, “What would be wrong with that?” and I answered, “We were seven years old!”

CHANGING FASHIONS
We thought our second grade teacher, Sr. Margaret Ellen, was young and hip and she was the first nun to wear the modified habit. With the old habit, you could just see their face and hands, so we were all kind of amazed to see Sr. Margaret Ellen’s hair, and arms and legs. Nobody recognized her at first. We thought we had a sub that day — a nun in training. Eventually just about all the nuns switched habits, except the elderly ones. When we were in 7th grade, our teacher, Judy Williams, wore a pantsuit. That was a big thing. I’m sure she had to get permission first. It was a very nice outfit, but it was pants.

THE TUNNEL
The tunnel was in the basement of the school, and it was a source of great mystery to us when we were kids. It was a fallout shelter and had one of those old yellow and black fallout shelter signs at the entrance. In the tunnel there were big gallon cans of mixed vegetables and peaches.

If there was a nuclear war, the plan was for all the kids to go into the tunnel, and we were supposed to eat out of those cans.

“I thought it was Fr. John and then the Pope. I didn’t think there was anybody in between.”

“We thought she was young and hip.” Sr. Margaret Ellen before she switched to the modified habit adopted by the Sisters of St. Joseph after Vatican II.
ANOTHER BIG CHANGE was when our music teacher, Joyce Baynes, played the guitar at Mass. There were only two “guitar mass” groups at St. Michael. The first group was started in 1967 by Ceal Bluhm and Mary Jo Fibuch and the Mass was held in the gym because it was just too modern for the church.

This group (pictured) began in 1973 and played guitar Masses at St. Michael through the ’70s. By the time it started, it was considered less cutting edge and we were allowed to be in the church.

8TH GRADE PLAY — “DON’T SHOOT ’TIL YOU SEE THE WHITES OF THEIR EYES”

In the play I had to answer a phone after it rang, and back then there were no cell phones or anything. The phone was actually attached by a cord somewhere on the stage and somebody in the principal’s office would have to call the phone on cue so it would ring, and I’d pick it up. It didn’t work out very well. I was waiting for the phone to ring, but it didn’t ring, so to keep things going I just pretended it rang and I started to talk. That’s when the phone actually ended up ringing.

PETITION TO SING JOHN DENVER SONG IN CHURCH

For our 8th grade graduation, we wanted to sing “Friends, I Will Remember You,” but everyone had to sign a petition first, and then Fr. Dudley said we had to explain why it should be sung in church. He allowed it — I think he always intended to — but he did make us change some of the words. There’s a line about how time gives us children, makes us wine, and he didn’t want us singing about wine.

LAST MASS AT ST. MICHAEL

It was supposed to be the 150th anniversary Mass and then it changed to being the last Mass at St. Michael. Ten of us from our class ended up going. We hadn’t coordinated with each other — we just showed up and connected. We took a photo with Archbishop Bernard Hebda. It was great to see each other. We agreed, let’s make sure we get a 50th reunion together.
