Why They Give – Donors Explain
Support for School

We’ve heard from people who’ve received tuition assistance talk about what it’s meant to them. So we thought it was time to talk to some people who helped make that assistance possible. Out of hundreds of donors, we spoke to four who explain why they think St. Matthew’s School deserves their support.

Deciding to Donate and Get Involved

Donna Duffy McCarthy (’64) remembers the exact day she decided she should get involved at St. Matthew’s School. It was last summer. She was in the car with her 24 year old son and happened to be near St. Matt’s, so she drove by to show him her elementary school. Then she drove him around her old neighborhood, pointing out houses of friends she grew up with. She says, “One of the houses I pointed out was Janice Mosberger’s; I hadn’t thought of her in years. When we got home, I found a letter from St. Matt’s requesting student scholarship assistance. It was signed by none other than Janice Mosberger — and I thought, ‘Maybe I’m supposed to get connected.’ So I made a donation and wrote a note saying if they needed help, to call.”

Donna did get a call and now she volunteers once a week at the school. She works with some 3rd grade students to improve their reading skills and she helps out in the Kindergarten, where the work is more varied. “It’s a big class so I do anything the teacher needs — zip jackets, help kids work on assignments, give hugs — whatever. I’m going to start working with a little reading group.”

Donna is a semi-retired teacher herself but she always taught older students, high school or college, including students at the Carlson School of Management at the U of M, the University of St. Thomas and Augsburg College. “I’ve never taught little ones, but it’s been surprisingly easy.”

Donna says she’s been impressed with the organization and order of the school as well as the caliber of the students. “The kids seem more quiet and well-behaved then I remember being. They seem to be serious students — especially the middle schoolers. They’re helpful, they open doors. They seem really purposeful. I remember we were just goof-off’s.”

And what a celebration it was!

Thank you, Fr. Steve...

Father Steve has been a “father” in so many ways to my family and me. He was my 1st “boss” when I was a 15 year old receptionist working at the Rectory. He was a generous guide to my husband and me when we were preparing to be married at St. Matthew’s even though we were working and living in Southern California at the time. Over time, he has presided over weddings and baptisms for scores of my siblings and our babies whether we were registered members to the parish or not. He has been our friend and confidant over these past 30 years. Most importantly, he has prayed for us and with us. He has helped us to feel the presence and protection of the Holy Spirit in our lives. He is our priest and friend. Our appreciation for his dedication and sacrifice to the West Side community can not be adequately expressed. We are now, and will be forever, thankful for his unending dedication. Thank you, Father Steve, for making such a wonderful impact on my family and our much-loved Westside community through your vocation!

1916 Baptismal Font Returned and Refurbished

Very few items from St. Matthew’s church survived the fire from 1968. What was recovered was mostly fire-damaged odds and ends that were sold in an auction to help raise money for the new church. As a result, St. Matthew’s has few artifacts representing its 120 year history.

One very precious item has recently been returned to the church. St. Matthew’s original Baptismal Font has been refurbished and restored to the sanctuary as a memorial to Harry Edward Lauen, who died on April 4, 2008. The memorial was established by Harry’s wife, Lois Nyman with support from his family and friends.

Harry wasn’t born Catholic but he converted in 1932, one year after he married Catherine Hanglberger (’24) whose family belonged to St. Matthew’s parish.

Harry joined St. Matthew’s himself in 1947, when he and Catherine moved into her parents’ home on the West Side. Together, their marriage produced four children, 18 grandchildren and 24 great-grandchildren. Catherine died in 1993, after 61 years of marriage.

Two years later, at age 85, Harry married Lois Nyman, age 68 who was also a widow. They enjoyed 13 happy years together building a new life and joining their two families. Harry moved into Lois’ home in Roseville after they married, but he kept his membership at St. Matthew’s Parish and every Sunday, he made the trip across town for mass.

When Harry died last April, Lois wanted to create a memorial at St. Matthew’s on his behalf. Coincidentally, the Baptismal Font had just been returned to St. Matthew’s from a family in Forest Lake, who, for years had used the basin as a bird bath. In fact, the base and basin were all that remained of the original Font. The six marble columns that surrounded the base were lost.

The restoration work on the Font took six months and was performed by Henning Decorating Studio, which specializes in church restoration. Because of its weight, a scaffold with a block and tackle was needed to move the Font into place near the back of the sacristy which is where it will stay.

We invite everyone to stop by the church to see the Baptismal Font for themselves. Whether you were one of the thousands of children baptized at St. Matthew’s between 1916-1968, or you simply admire beautiful craftsmanship, the Baptismal Font is a piece of living history that’s worth a visit. We’re glad to have it back home and offer thanks to all who made that possible. Most particularly, we acknowledge Harry Lauen, for his commitment to St. Matthew’s and for the family who chose such a fitting way to memorialize that commitment.

The Baptismal Font was originally purchased in 1916 by family and friends of Gualteri Stahl, 1847-1916 and is dedicated to his memory. Gualteri, who later adopted the American version of his name, Walter, was born in Germany but spent most of his life on the West Side. It’s believed he worked as a grocer together with his brother at a store located at 63 W. Winifred. The house he lived in at 579 Ohio still stands today.

For Donna, the school is a worthwhile investment not only of her money, but also her time, as she says, “I’m just thrilled that these kids have a chance to get a decent, quiet education. It’s a real leg up for them.”

The Nasseff Family from Holy Family

Joe Nasseff (‘60) is one of the owners of Joseph’s Grill and has spent his whole life on the West Side. Joe, along with his four sisters and one brother grew up in a house near George and Robert Street. The Nasseff’s went to Holy Family Church, the same church Joe belongs to now, but his parents wanted their children to attend Catholic school and Holy Family didn’t have one. They looked into St. Michael’s but were turned down, Joe says, because their family wasn’t Irish. St. Matthew’s School took them in.

He says it was a great experience. “At recess, we played in the quarry. There were very few lay teachers back then — we were taught by the Sisters of Notre Dame. One nun said she wanted to put my head through a wall and I believed her. But the nuns were fantastic.” And the classes, he recalls, were big, “Fifty kids in our classroom with one teacher.”

He recalls a time when one of the nuns was walking the students past some busy intersections after school and one of the students greeted a policeman by saying “Hi, Copper.” The Sister didn’t think that was the proper way to address an officer and she let the student know it. Joe says, “Kids were always taught to show respect. That stuck with me for the rest of my life. Nuns were good at that.”

Joe, together with his cousins, Ray and Mickey Joseph, got into the restaurant business back in 1987 when they bought George’s, a bar that served food down by State and Concord Street. In 2000, his uncle bought the property near Plato and Wabasha and asked them if they wanted to move. They tripled the size of their business and Joe’s son, Michael, came on board. Joe says,”He runs the show now. I work for him.”

As a successful West Side business owner, Joe thinks St. Matthew’s School is an important part of the community and he’s happy to support it. “I believe in Catholic education. I was given an opportunity to go to Catholic grade school and high school. I loved it. Now, I have an opportunity to give back. Not as much as I’d like — but something. If you can do something, you should.”

Shirley Smith Says She Always Missed St. Matt’s

While Shirley and Larry Smith are both West Siders, they aren’t the most likely people to support St. Matthew’s School. Shirley’s family belonged to St. Matthew’s Parish and she even attended the school for a few years but when her brother switched schools, she went with him. Because she left the school before graduating, Shirley says she never had the connection with it that an alumni has.

Larry’s family belonged to St. Michael’s parish and after Shirley and Larry got married, the couple joined St. Michael’s as a family and eventually sent their three children to school there.

But, Shirley says, “I always missed St. Matt’s.” So, a few years after their kids had graduated from school, Shirley and Larry joined St. Matthew’s Parish.

Now as a parishioner, she feels it’s very important to support the school. “We need to keep the kids....we have to hang on to our young people. And I see wonderful kids coming out of St. Matt’s.”

For Shirley, it’s all about laying down a good foundation. “The school instills in them an inner core of love for God and all that’s good. They can draw on that for the rest of their lives.”

When the kids graduate, she believes that core will always be there, even if they slack off or fall away. “I still have a lot of the things I learned from the nuns way back when. It’s something you take with you all of your life. To this day, when I see an ambulance go by, I say a prayer.”

Shirley used to be a volunteer reader to first graders, and says that she still gets hugs from the now grown up kids she used to work with. She jokes, “I tell my husband I should go back — I’m running out of hugs.”

And from Napa, California – Judy Klotz Morhar (’57)

Judy Klotz Morhar (’57) may still consider herself a West Sider but she hasn’t actually lived in Minnesota since she graduated from Humboldt H.S. in 1961. After high school, she attended the University of Chicago, lived briefly in New York then spent over two years in Venezuela as a Peace Corps volunteer. For the last 35 years, she’s lived someplace most people would like to vacation, in the heart of wine country in Napa, California.

Judy reconnected with St. Matthew’s when she received an invitation to come to Reunion Sunday in May, 2007, which marked Judy’s 50 year anniversary since graduating. It was a long way to travel for classmates she hadn’t seen in 50 years, but for Judy, these were the people she grew up with. “I’ve so often thought, because the population of our class was so stable, those kids were like family. I was glad to get together with them.”

The trip not only brought her back together with old friends, it also gave her a look into what St. Matthew’s is like today — and she liked it. During mass, in addition to two girls making their First Communion, all the women in the congregation were invited to come forward and offer a blessing for a mother and her recently baptized child. Judy says, “There was such a message of inclusiveness, compassion and kindness — I just thought it was terrific….raising a kid is indeed a village and community effort and commitment. It was touching — I was very moved.”

Judy says she supports Alumni & Friends for a few reasons. She appreciates the education she received at the school and says, “I felt very well prepared.” But she also supports the school’s current mission to reach out and educate children in the community whose families couldn’t otherwise afford tuition.

When talking about her reunion, Judy’s only regret was not having more time to visit with all of her classmates who came — but she hopes to get together with them again. Until then, she’s issued an open invitation to any Class of ’57 St. Matt’s alumni to come and visit her in California. She’ll pour the wine.

From the Editor

“I Want to Invest in Tomorrow, which is the Children”

The St. Paul Voice interviewed Fr. Steve Adrian for an article that ran in its December issue. In the story, Fr. Steve talks about his 30 years as pastor of St. Matthew’s as well as his hopes for the future. The following is a brief excerpt. To get a copy of the full article, you may call or stop in at the parish center.

Looking back, (Adrian) believes he entered the priesthood at an opportune time. He was ordained in 1968, which was a time of great change in the Catholic Church... “In the 60’s there was a huge amount of hope present in the Catholic community. Social movements, civil rights movements and the values of Dr. King dovetailed nicely with the image of the church and flowed out of the (Second Vatican) Council.”

Adrian admires the “fierce loyalty” of West Siders and enjoys hearing their stories. “Once they move, there is still a part of them that never lets go of the West Side,” he said. “It reflects the strength of a very powerful neighborhood. The West Side has always been a welcoming first stop for immigrants, which still continues today.”

Looking Forward

“I am 66 years-old and on the downside,” said Adrian. “With my time and energy that I have left I need to devote to children. Our generation had its chance. They (the children) are the hopes and dreams. They will make the difference in the world. I want to invest in tomorrow, which is them.”

In spite of the tough times the country is facing today, Adrian still sees a silver lining.

“Whenever there are large dramatic changes, it generates greater activity in the community process and public life,” he said. “It challenges every single one of us to examine our lives. Young people want to get involved in the process. It’s a reawakening of energy. From that standpoint it is a day of hope and enthusiasm, of change and opportunity.”
